

Audit Management

Optimizing your assurance services with Archer

With limited resources and increased responsibility, your internal audit department can struggle to deliver strategic leadership, coordinated assurance, and other services your organization needs. Faced with a rapidly changing regulatory and risk landscape, your internal audit strategy may not readily adapt to these changes. While internal audit is usually considered a compliance function, now dynamic risk planning should be incorporated into approaches and results.

Existing approaches, tools, and expertise usually deliver point-in-time, static audit planning. Decentralized documentation captured in multiple tools and systems makes it difficult to integrate, and there is often limited coordination of objectives among risk, compliance, and audit groups.

With Archer, your audit management efforts can transform into a strategic advantage for your organization.

Proactive decision-making: Using a risk-based audit approach, you can collaborate with risk and compliance to prioritize audit efforts based on your organization's business priorities.

Agility within the business: Controlling the complete audit lifecycle enables improved governance of audit activities and integrating with risk and control functions.

Improved performance: Consolidating the process in one system allows effective management of audits.

A risk-based approach to audit management focuses efforts on the most important areas of your organization, reduces costs, and ensures management assurance controls are effective.

Archer Audit Management provides a centralized system to house and catalog all issues raised by internal audit, risk and compliance teams, or management. Our solution offers a holistic view of issue significance and remediation status for all teams.

Internal audit can leverage control testing and risk assessment and mitigation by other teams to evaluate the current status, quality, and effectiveness of risks and controls. This reduces redundancy of tracking findings and remediation plans, drives efficiency, and delivers transparency and trust throughout the organization.
